requires he serve a lot of volunteer hours.

"At most four years," Danielle said of her son's relentless work ethic.

Boy Scouts are required to do a minimum of six hours of volunteer work to achieve the next rank level.

"Their scout leader is strict," Danielle says.

"They get a badge, they earn it," Reed says.

Tucker says he enjoys being in the scouts and the time he spends volunteering in the community.

"The sign has helped a lot," Reed says of the recycling center.

The sign took about four hours for Tucker to make and he isn't quite done with it; some things might be tweaked here and there.

"The Solid Waste Authority said it is one of the best recycling bins they have got. Overall it's been good," Reed says.

"A lot of that goes to (Tucker). He deserves the credit," he adds.

Tucker says he found it interesting to discover all things they used the recycled material for, including making recycling bins, fleece jacket liners and flower pots, just to name a few.

Reed calls the recycling program a win-win for everyone, because burning plastics is bad for the environment and can pose a health risk for people exposed to the fumes.

Reed says he isn't done with Tucker yet and appreciates all the youth has done to help with the new recycling program.
