Buying footwear does not have to be a painful, frustrating experience. A hassle free way to shop for shoes and boots starts with selecting a store with a good selection of footwear to choose from.

A good question to ask yourself is what is the primary use for this pair of shoes? If this is a work shoe, does your employer require crush proof toes, or metatarsal guards or perhaps puncture proof soles? These are available in various materials, such as steel, aluminum or composite toes, stainless steel mid-soles, E.T.C. Or does your job require slip resistant soles?

If your job is outdoors, you'll probably want a sole with good traction. Workers on concrete floors should consider good shock absorbing footwear.

Working outdoors or in unheated buildings in cold weather usually requires some insulation, which is available in various thickness or weights of thermal materials.

The hunting crowd normally ask for water-proof and insulated footwear with good traction and firm support. With any insulated boots, the correct socks are very important for a comfortable day outdoors.

Hiking or running requires a comfortable, shock absorbing, flexible shoe that is durable enough to absorb the punishment given such footwear.
